KATE Meynell, who has been working as a video artist on the Blackstock Estate, has been teaching local people to use video equipment, making campaign tapes, and working with a women's group and youth club. She has also been making a video 'flick book', using three monitors (pictured here, together with Kate's young daughter Hannah).

Kate has been working with three other artists on housing estates in a project to involve the community, to increase understanding and enjoyment of the visual arts, to promote participation and to enable local people to develop practical skills.

Kate's fellow-artists are David Hevey, a photographer on the Barnsbury Estate; Mark Fairmington, who is a painter on the Girdlestone Estate; and Roger Towndrow, a printmaker on the Hornsey Lane Estate.

The resulting work went on show at the Hardware Gallery last month.
